

Coronavirus Outbreak Resources

Many organizations are providing regular updates related to the COVID-19 outbreak. While the LGMA does not intend to duplicate efforts of other organizations, we want to be sure our stakeholders have access to the latest information. Please see the bottom of this post for resources that may be useful and important as you work to provide safe and nutritious food during this crisis.

LGMA member companies will continue to use stringent food safety practices and provide leafy greens for grocery stores and restaurants amidst the COVID-19 outbreak. Please see this message from California Secretary of Agriculture Karen Ross with some important information regarding the Department's continuation of important activities related to food safety.

LGMA member companies will also continue to be audited by government officials to verify that important and required food safety practices are being followed. During on-farm visits, government auditors observe activities of work crews to make sure they understand and follow required hygiene practices. Find a list of LGMA Certified Members here.

Coronavirus Updates

Public health officials have emphasized that there is no evidence that fresh produce or any other food can transmit the virus, and that food production and marketing continue as vital and essential industries. In addition, please see the following for additional information and updates:
